Co PI, Identifying Reasons for Racial/Ethnic Disparities with Completing the HPV Vaccine Series among Adolescent Females 2012 - 2013

Collaborative effort between Co-PIs and MetroHealth System, Summa Health System, and the Cuyahoga County Board of Health.

Abstract

The human papillomavirus (HPV) vaccine can prevent nearly all genital warts, cervical and anal cancers, but HPV vaccination rates in eligible populations in the United States are less than 33% for full completion of the three-dose regimen. These rates vary by racial/ethnic and socioeconomic groups, and numerous studies have examined reasons for immunization barriers. However, it is unclear whether appropriate questions about barriers are being asked in these studies, especially with regard to subpopulations, and none have linked barriers at the patient level to those perceived by vaccine providers. In addition, no study has evaluated barrier differences by immunization level (not immunized vs. partially immunized) or identified what impacted those who completed all doses (fully immunized) for comparison. The purpose of the proposed study is to examine barriers to both HPV vaccination initiation and completion using focus groups of 1) parents of 11-18 year old females and 2) their immunization providers to identify feasible and effective interventions that can be implemented across the patient-provider continuum. Particular focus is on populations with lower vaccination rates and higher health disparities.

PI, Small Grants Program

2011 - 2012

The intent of this project was to gain more understanding of the experiences of LGBTQ youth in the United States through photovoice. Linking with Gay-Straight Alliances and school counselors nationwide, a photo competition will be funded to encourage LGBTQ youth (aged 14-18) to submit digital photos of what it means to them to be LGBTQ in America. Photos will be collected via a website that will contain guidelines for submissions, basic photography pointers, and an internet-based survey link to the Gay Lesbian Straight Education Network's (GLSEN) community school climate survey adapted to include a six-item school-connectedness survey. Photos will be analyzed using qualitative software (NVivo 8) looking for themes, content, and overall climate. Surveys will be analyzed for comparison to State and National data available for school climate and school connectedness. Direct and indirect links between school-connectedness and academic outcomes exist for youth in general. This study aims to investigate the connections between these phenomena and LGBTQ youth as well as to further illuminate the experiences of these young people, literally through their own lenses.
